

“Better Call Saul”

Although I have come late to the series, I have become a devotee of “Better Call Saul”. A master of chicanery, lawyer Saul Goodman is something to behold, So too is Mike Ehrmantraut, the gruff parking lot attendant with a most unexpected back story. Creative scams, a billboard which brings clients running to Saul, sinister drug dealers, big law firm politics, a class-action suit generated by a Bingo game and a variety of other subplots constantly take you by surprise. Why does Saul buy a pair of high-end walking shoes for a woman in a retirement home and why are those red tennis shoes strung over a telephone wire on a lonely road just south of the border? Just of the few of the wildly inventive moments in “Better Call Saul”
